HOW DID WE SHIFT?

ME

Many conference attendees were wanting to learn how to support Truth and Reconciliation. However, half of them felt their neighbourhoods were not inclusive.

Passive

Almost all conference participants have thought of doing a neat community project. Half felt a lack of resources and inspiration stopped them.

Inside

Many participants have a facility or hall, however not many are familiar with their other unique community assets.

Space

A hub that is welcoming and inclusive can be a struggle for our conference community attendees to understand.

Global

Some participants didn't know what Community Economic Development is. They said their community could be more innovative and creating partnerships.

Shifting

Attitudes

WE

Tim Fox, Indigenous Director with the Calgary Foundation challenged us to understand truth. Participants are able to think of how their own communities can support the 94 'Calls to Action'.

Active

Several participants were inspired to activate their community and story tell their own ideas of community engagement.

Outside

Author Lori Beattie was inspiring and demonstrated the value of being outdoors while helping us shift community involvement.

Place

After learning about how to 'Grow your Community Hub', attendees began to think of their community not just a space but as a place to belong.

Local

All the participants left understanding the opportunity for CED and how it benefits residents with financial barriers.
